Second Term English Exam

Time: 03h

Nature provides to the different forms of life all the necessary elements they need for their survival. Thanks to the rain that falls regularly human beings and animals have enough water to drink so as to keep alive while plants and trees receive their share of this precious liquid in order to grow and bear products and the fruit that constitute the main items in the feeding of whole population

Nature is wonderful not only because of its majestic beauty but also with the immense riches it provides. It has mountains which hold all the minerals that we use in industry and the rocks we need in building it has also seas and rivers that abound with all sorts of fish. The multitude of flowers and plants existing in woods and forests enable a big variety of wild creatures survive and to produce important benefits for mankind. In addition we have trees some of which constitute a large source of wood while others produce delicious fruits thanks to the combination of rain and soil.

Today, the technological revolution that sweeps around the world constitutes a serious danger to the ecological balance of nature. It has brought drastic changes to the environment and negative effects on the weather. The toxic gases of factories combined with the dangerous smokes of cars and vehicles generate heavy destruction of plants and animals while they cause terrible diseases to mankind. Also the fast and uncontrolled urbanization everywhere in the planet affect the delicate system upon which nature has been built over millions of years.
